THE SLAVE TRAFFIC.

Selling Girls in Northern Nigerta-An Englishman's Experience.

Business connected with the sale of some silver took me one day to the house of a slave dealer who had some 12 or 14 very engaging young females to dispose of, says a writer in the Empire Magazine. Entering the house through the heavy-pillared, low, bematted porch, I found myself, when my eyes had grown accustomed to the subdued light and the fleecy smoke of the burning spices, in a large, square, hall-shaped room. The young women were squatting about on skins and mats doing one another's hair, touching up one another's eyes with kwolli (black antimony powder), laughing, talking, singing, and to all appearances thoroughly enjoying themselves, notwithstanding that they had only recently been torn from the bosoms of their families. When the dealer had looked at the silver I brought with me he directed my attention to his stock, and, after a few assimilated food. tention to his stock, and, after a few observations relative to their place of origin, called up two or three of the girls and tried to push business, expatiating upon their points just as a horse dealer might do in this country. One was cunning in the preparation of the perfumes of the country, in the blending of civet and frankincense and myrrh, just the wife for a wealthy Ba Ture (white man) like me. Another could sing and dance; all were clean and well favored. After listening to the dealer for some time, I told him very plainly that I did not require a female slave. "Ah," he replied, "then I know what you want, and have just the article to suit you.' And a girl, half Arab, half Sudani, was immediately produced from a different room. The dealer was sure she would suit me-he was aching to get that silver without paying currency for it-he would let me have her cheap; she wasn't everybody's money. "No! she is not," I readily admitted, adding rather more forcibly, "she isn't mine, for instance."

"Speaking of fast trains, the fastest I ever made was on the road in the west, when we went 11 miles so quickly that the telegraph poles looked like a fence. Arrived at our journey's end, we put up the train and were resting ourselves when we glanced up the line and saw a dark streak approaching at terrific speed. We were astonished for a moment, but as it slowed up we at once recognized the shadow of the train we had just brought in!"

The members of the club rose in silence, and, after electing the guest a full member, adjourned .- Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Strange Flower.

A strange flower has been borne by a Malmaison rose bush growing in a garden at Violet hill, Stowmarket, England. The bush was close to an apple tree, and on one of the largest buds bursting into bloom five perfect apple blossoms, each on separate stalks, were seen growing in the center. As the petals of the rose developed the apple blossoms opened, the two forming a curious contrast.
